

Diane Dal-pra

The central theme of Diane Dal-pra's work is about our relationships with possessions. The rituals and superstitions around objects we own and how they engulf us and our identities as well as being a source of comfort.

Still Life Painting Activity

Set up a still life of objects you are fond of, make sketches and paintings of them. Try to capture the objects' personalities and their communication with one another.

Step 1- Collect objects you like, or which mean a lot to you. These could be objects you carry, have in your house or something you wear. What attracts you to them?

Step 2- Set up the objects in a space. Think about what attracts you to these objects and how can you show this in your sketches and paintings!

Step 3- Make sketches and paintings of the objects. Try to show their personalities and how much they mean to you in your paintings, with the use of colour and where you place them.

Oren Pinhassi

Oren Pinhassi's sculptures examine the relationship between the human figure, nature and the built environment. They are made from sand and plaster, layered by hand over welded steel skeletons.

Sand Sculpture Activity

Create sand sculptures on the beach using found materials! Think of buildings and people, focussing on shapes and textures you can see.

Step 1- Go to the beach or somewhere with sand. Look around you, what shapes can you see in buildings, people and the scenery?

Step 2- What objects and materials are around you? Could you use any of them in your sculpture?

Step 3- Think of how you can bring these shapes, materials, objects and textures together into a sand sculpture. Start with a simple sculpture and add detailing.
